Calling the Cattle. In Norway, when the snow begins to melt, the cattle are driven from the valleys up into the mountains where they remain all the summer, feeding upon the rich grasses of the uplands. The herds are in charge of a young girl, who lives quite alone in a small hut known as a "Sacter" hut. When this girl desires to call her flocks together she sounds a note on the "Lur," a long trumpet, the sound carrying for a considerable distance.
